How to Raise Early Potatoes.

A dish of new, mealy potatoes, about the middle of June, is not to be despised. They are good upon the table, and by no means bad in the barrel, on their way to a lively upwards. There is a difference of a month | themselves. or two in the time required by different vari- stone eties to mature. This fact is often overlooked by farmers, and they continue planting only the late sorts, and have no new potatoes till August. Early varieties are a first essential in getting an early harvest. The Mercer or Chenango will mature in twelve weeks. and by forcing, in ten. It is not so apt to rot when forced, as when planted late. The Early Sovereign, Carpenter, Studley's, Seedling, Wendell's Seedling. Dykman, and the early June, requires a still shorter season, BONNETS, say from six to twelve weeks. In almost every section of the country there are early potatoes, probably quite as good as any of

There are several methods of hastening their maturity. A favorite method with the German market gardeners is, to bring the seed potatoes in barrels into a warm room. about the first of March. The eyes start rapidly, and in about two or three weeks they are ready to plant. Another method. which we have practiced for some years, is to start the potatoes in a gentle hot-bed, about the middle of March. The tubers are cut in halves, and laid flat side down upon the bed. as thick as they can be placed. They are then covered with about two inches of garden mold, and the sashes are put over them As soon as they are up two or three inches they are ready to transplant. They should be removed carefully, separating the roots with as little breaking as possible, and put in the drills where they are to grow. As they do not yield a full crop under this treatment. they can be planted closer than common field culture, say in drills thirty inches apart. putting the hills twelve inches apart in the

A warm, sandy loam, sloping to the south or southeast, should be selected for the crop. It should be well manured with horse dung, about half of it applied in the drills. Some manure their grounds for early potatoes in the Fall, and this is, we think, a good planfor that part of the manure which is applied broadcast.
